Embracing the new normal is everyone's challenge. But perhaps even more so for entrepreneurs who need to take the lead in balancing safe operation and a profitable livelihood for the entire team. Aside from adding a layer of security to each process when you reopen your business, products must also adapt to meet consumer priorities. These include better ways to re-engage customers, increase defense against viruses, and reimagining delivery channels that allow social distancing. Customers are hesitant to go out and spend so much to maintain hard-to-demand savings. But there are new gaps to fill their lives as they seek harmless ways to socialize, travel, shop, eat and experience an equally fulfilling life altogether. Here we round up how you can prepare and make noise for your business to get your customers' attention while you gear up your products and services to reach them safely. Oiling the Gears A car that you haven't used in a while needs a thorough check-up for damage, and maybe even upgrades to be safe to drive. Likewise, companies bravely coming out to face the pandemic need to control what is in their arsenal. Review your business plan & contingency plan Review your business plan to see if your early 2020 priorities are still valid. Checking government and private programs out there meant helping businesses weather the worst ditches. After learning our lesson that unexpected really can happen, foolproof your business from other possible disruptions it may face. Look into your core competence core competence Fortify your business with technology: the oil that has driven us through this crisis. Check the cash flow and stock of the cash flow forecast to see how far they can take you. Find a budget for EPs, new product lines and logistics. Look at Industry Trends See your competition is also worthwhile. Reach for your team's perspectives so your business can get a holistic overview. For some industry views, click here and here. Keys in ignition Now that you have your plans in place, it's time to think about how you'll effectively inform your customers that you're back in business. Find the channels your target market uses, determine the social media platforms and technological tools that your consumers are more comfortable using. Use data that is available to you, such as Refresh product offerings ride on your bestsellers by bundling it with your slower movement or overstocked products. Attract your customers with discounts and freebies (as delivery) to help more products end up in your customers' basket. Also build long-term relationships with customers with money back guarantees. Brand image also matters when you pair your products with emotional benefits like amusement, convenience or an opportunity to donate to a cause. This can be a good time to also work with photographers, videographers, or advertising agencies to help you visualize your brand and products while business is not yet so busy. You will also help these hard hit industries that are likely to make bargains right now. Find the right words For consumers, they need to know when you want to be open, what products and services won't be available, and the actions your company has taken to minimize the spread of the virus. Humbly acknowledge that things will not be perfect, and ade your customers' suggestions, if any. We're going to break it further here. Revving the engine With your products and brand message ready, go out and reach consumers. Be receptive to the new habits your patrons could have adopted - and be memorably present there. SMS: Your easiest Win A mobile phone is probably the most essential device in the world. SMS is a fast and secure way to get hold of your existing customer database. According to 2016 surveys, more than half of the Filipino population uses cell phones, and about 3 in 10 Filipinos have smartphones. Texts are seen immediately. You can take advantage of this by finding ways to collect your contact information. You can hold a contest, create a loyalty program, provide an incentive to answer surveys, or have them sign up for SMS updates or newsletters. Clean and build your customer database with these tips. Your first sentence can make or break a customer connection, and these are the types of messages they should get from you. Pro-tip: Instead of manually creating databases and sending messages from a mobile phone Use AMBER to send advertising explosion with your brand as sender ID e-mail: Your second channel Alternatively, story-driven e-mail explosions are cost-effective as you don't pay by send-out. These are great for integrating uplifting images, personal headlines, showcasing news, list schedules, and link directly to a shopping cart, your site, or your social media accounts. You can strengthen your brand with custom layouts and personal subject heads to capture attention. Just be sure to keep emails short, accurate and visually appealing. SOCIAL MEDIA: Entertainment & Connection Hub Because ECQ has made social media integral to our lives, your posts will reach more active users. Compared to traditional media like billboards or TV spots, social media is still the most convenient option for mass marketing. Just be wary of not flooding your customers and using these strategies to overcome social media fatigue. Pro-tip: On Facebook, you need to make use of FB ads to reach the right market and convert users to buyers effectively. MESSAGING APPS: The New Marketplace ECQ also re-popularized the use of community chats as people seek funds to socialize and connect hyper-local. Here you get to use a real voice and geographically group your customers so that your team can personally respond to them and deliver useful messages in their area. Pro-tip: Stay responsive online with Globe myBusiness ThePLAN Plus 999's 8GBs of mobile data monthly. This is ideal for updates to messaging apps anywhere. ONLINE: Your 24/7 Storefront Don't discount power search. When potential customers see your business on social media or in a messaging app but can't bookmark it, they turn to find you online. Many still rely on a quick Google search, too, when searching for products and services. Be ready and renew your website with your updates, new offers and other relevant changes you've made. This applies the same to your pages in e-commerce sites like Lazada or Shopee. Employing Search Engine Optimization (SEO) techniques is a must in our increasingly online world. In a nutshell, the right SEO will improve your site's visibility when searched, thus growing your site traffic. This is done by using and placing the right keywords and phrases related to your business on your site vital sections. Learn more about this and Search Engine Marketing (SEM) in this resource. Pro-tip: UNLI Internet 1899 will help you stay connected at all times, best for monitoring your site and pages. Driving Forward COVID-19 creates new lifestyles for all of us, but as humans have done for years, we learn to adapt and grow. Your company got to where it is because of a product or skill that you specialize in. As long as you remain passionate about learning with others, partner with the right providers like Globe myBusiness, keep a pulse in your market, and remain committed responding to your customers' changing needs, your business will persevere.
